

ABSTRACT

The present invention relates to a method of examining or diagnosing schizophrenia, which includes measuring concentrations of D-serine and L-serine in a
5 biological sample. According to the method of the present invention, schizophrenia can be examined or diagnosed by measuring concentrations of D-serine and L-serine in a biological sample by analysis techniques such as high performance liquid chromatography and the 10 like.